

Authors

Jane Henrici is an anthropologist specializing in research and programming focused on gender and other disparities. She is lecturer at George Washington University, senior research fellow with the Institute for Women's Policy Research, and independent consultant. Her publications and presentations include analyses of economic development, poverty, labor, welfare, health and other care, and political participation as these affect diverse women and their families across different nations.

Sabine Klocke-Daffa is Senior Researcher in Social and Cultural Anthropology at the University of Tübingen/Germany. She has done intensive fieldwork in Namibia. Her research interests include cultural networks of sharing and exchange, gender, basic income, social security and formal insurances in Africa, and Practicing Anthropology. She has been coordinator of several series of public events on anthropological topics and is currently building up BA and MA courses in Applied Anthropology at Tuebingen.

Barbara Sorgoni is an Associate Professor in Cultural Anthropology at the University of Turin. She has conducted research in the field of Italian colonial anthropology and social relations in the Horn of Africa. At present her research focuses on asylum administrative procedures and practices.

Cătălina Tesăr holds a doctorate in social anthropology from University College London, based on research on kinship among Transylvanian Cortorari Roma. She is a researcher at the National Museum of the Romanian Peasant Bucharest and a postdoctoral fellow at the Romanian Institute for Research on National Minorities Cluj-Napoca, studying causes and effects of the migration of Romanian Roma to Western Europe.

Elisabeth Tauber is Junior Professor for Sociocultural Anthropology at the Free University of Bozen-Bolzano. She has conducted extensive fieldwork with Sinti on marriage, death, nomadism, economies of begging and mnemonic practices. Her current research focuses on institutional rhetoric and practices of “inclusionary policies” in public institutions. She has been engaged in legalizing scrap metal collection for Sinti families and was the scientific responsible in a project of participatory photography with refugees from central and eastern Africa.

Dorothy Louise Zinn is an Associate Professor of Cultural Anthropology at the Free University of Bozen-Bolzano. She has conducted research on issues of youth unemployment, clientelism and corruption, immigration and multiculturalism, and social protest. In addition to her academic study of migration, since 1998 she has been a volunteer scientific consultant with the immigrant advocacy group Associazione Tolbà of Matera. She is currently serving in Brixen-Bressanone, South Tyrol, as a member of the local administration’s working group for integration.

Monika Weissensteiner holds a European Joint MA in anthropology from the National University of Ireland Maynooth, the Université Lumière Lyon 2 in France and the Universitat Autònoma de Barcelona in Spain. She has pursued additional training in psycho-social work in the context of conflict and emergencies. Her research interest include EU asylum policy and practice, violence and institutions. She has worked in international development and education. More recently she has been engaged in monitoring, awareness-raising and advocacy on issues relating to the situation of refugees in Italy.