

Authors

Marco Accorinti is an associate professor at the University of Roma Tre, where he is the coordinator of the degree programme in Social Work. He has been First Researcher in the National Research Council of Italy. His research focuses on social policy and social phenomena such as migration and ageing. He teaches Knowledge Production and Critical Practice Application in Social Work and Planning and Evaluation of Social Services at the Free University of Bozen-Bolzano since 2016.

Anna Aluffi Pentini is professor at the Department of Education at the University of Roma Tre, where she teaches Social and Intercultural Education, and Educational Counselling. Her research and publications also focus on these areas. She studied Pedagogy, German, French and Psychology in Rome. She obtained her doctoral degree with a dissertation on Intercultural Education between Theory and Practice. She also managed social education projects in practice, especially in Rome. Since 2017 she coordinates the degree programme for Early Childhood Education at the University of Roma Tre.

Andrea Bilotti, PhD in Social Work, is tenure-track assistant professor at the University of Roma Tre. He has gained long-standing experience in teaching and research and is cofounder and researcher at the Inequality Lab at the University of Siena. His research focuses on sociology and social work, with particular reference to the analysis of social transformations, poverty and inequality, care for individuals and families in situations of vulnerability, and innovative methods and techniques for planning, support and professional evaluation. He is also consultant at the World Bank (Social Protection & Labor ECA) for the implementation of the Guaranteed Minimum Income programme in Italy.

Anna Bortolotti is a specialist social worker and has been working for eight years with the University of Trento as a tutor for internships in the degree programme in social work.

Katharina Crepaz is senior researcher at the Institute for Minority Rights, Eurac Research, Bozen-Bolzano and Privatdozentin (senior lecturer with habilitation) at the Technical University of Munich. She holds a PhD in Political Science from the University of Innsbruck and a Habilitation in Health Sciences with Special Focus on Diversity Governance from the Technical University of Munich. Her research focuses on achieving inclusion, political participation and well-being for societally marginalized and diverse groups. She is also interested in transnational civil society collaboration and post-pandemic resilience, and regularly teaches on gender, diversity, and health.

Marina Della Rocca is an anthropologist and a feminist activist who has worked as an antiviolence practitioner supporting women who have suffered domestic violence. Her research focus lies on the intersection between gender-based violence and migration and on the advocacy of migrant women who are survivors of domestic violence. She has conducted postdoctoral research on perceptions of gender-based violence and empowerment among migrant-origin women.

Susanne U. Elsen is full professor for Social Sciences at the Free University of Bozen-Bolzano. Her special interests in research, teaching and practice focus on transformative research, community development and solidarity economy. She is currently working on developing sustainability transition research in social work, on the question of illegal and exploitative labour in Northern Italian agriculture and on social farming on mafia-confiscated properties in Southern Italy.

Francesca Falcone holds a PhD from the Department of Political and Social Sciences, University of Calabria, where she is research fellow and contract lecturer. She is head of LARCO (Laboratorio per l'Action Research e la Consapevolezza Organizzativa) and carries out professional and organisational supervision for third sector organisations. Her research interests include organisational change, inter-organisational collaborations, action research and complexity science applied to social services.

Sabina Frei is a social and community worker, coach and organisational developer. She has more than 10 years of teaching experience in the Bachelor's programme in Social Work and the Master's programme in Ecosocial Design at the Free University of Bozen-Bolzano, where she is also a member of the internship commission in Social Work. As a research assistant she worked on the topics of quality in social work and social services as well as on the core elements of Family Systems Nursing.

Mariarita Gervasi is a social worker and has been working for six years with the University of Trento as a tutor for internships in the degree programme in social work.

Rocco Guglielmi is a social worker and had been working for three years with the University of Trento as a tutor for internships in the degree programme in social work. Currently, he works as coordinator of parenting support projects.

Lara Hobi is a social worker (BSc) and works in the area of migration and support for people affected by poverty at the non-governmental organization Caritas in St.Gallen (CH). At the same time, she is studying for a Master's degree in Sociology at the University of Konstanz (DE) and is working on a research project of the university's Cluster of Excellence on the perception of inequality among adolescents.

Ulrike Huber Girardi graduated in Social Education from the Free University of Bozen-Bolzano, specialised in adventure pedagogy and systemic counselling, and is currently training in naturotherapy. She has been working as an educator since 2008. Since 2020 she has been working as coordinator of the ExPEERience and Camps projects at the Papperlapapp Youth Centre in Bozen-Bolzano.

Martin Hunold holds a PhD in Educational Science and is research fellow at the Institute for Pedagogy at Kiel University. His research interests focus on reconstructive organizational, educational and biographical research, on theories and methods of social and organizational pedagogy and on child and youth welfare with a particular focus on the relationship between biography, profession and organization.

Tobias Kindler (MSW) is a social worker, a research associate at the Eastern Switzerland University of Applied Sciences (OST), Institute of Social Work and Social Spaces, and a PhD student at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. His research interests focus on social work policy practice, child and youth welfare, and the implementation of the rights of the child.

Doris Kofler is an adjunct professor of General and Social Pedagogy at the Faculty of Education, University of Bozen-Bolzano, since 2009. She teaches intercultural pedagogy in the field of teacher and educator training. Her research activities focus on the topics of interculturalism and university teacher education, the development of inclusive curricula, Life Long Learning, old age and grandparenting, leisure and nature.

Claudia Lintner is junior professor of Sociology at the Free University of Bozen-Bolzano. Her research interests focus on the concrete border experiences of refugees, the understanding of agency as a relational process, the digitalization in the refugee context as well as policies and practices of exclusion. Currently she coordinates the project Digital border experiences of refugees: Understanding the use of ICT in the context of forced migration at the Brenner border - Italy (DIBO), a cooperation between the Free University of Bozen-Bolzano (Italy), the University of Innsbruck (Austria) and the Technical University of Munich (Germany).

Walter Lorenz was professor of Social Work at the University College, Cork in Ireland (1978–2001) and at the Free University of Bozen-Bolzano in Italy (2001–2017), where he also served two 4-year terms as Rector. He is currently contract professor at Charles University, Prague. A native of Germany, he qualified as a social worker at the London School of Economics and practised this profession for 8 years in East London. His research interests cover anti-racism practice and current and historical aspects of European social work and social policy. He holds honorary doctorates from the universities of Ghent and Aalborg.

Karina Machado is researcher in the field of forced migration in Europe and South America. She obtained her master degree in Regional Development at the TU Dortmund in Germany in cooperation with the Ardhi University in Tanzania. She has a long-term experience in development cooperation projects in different countries in South America, Africa, Middle East and Europe. Her current research focuses on the use of technology in forced migration in Europe.

Elisa Matutini is researcher in Sociology at the Department of Philosophy and Cultural Heritage of the Ca' Foscari University of Venice, where she teaches "Theories of Social Work" and "Methodologies of Social Work" in the degree course in Science of Society and Social Work and "Research and Evaluation for Social Work" in the degree course in Work, Social Citizenship, Interculturality. She works on poverty, inequality and social work.

Andrea Nagy is junior professor in Sociology at the Faculty of Education of the Free University of Bolzano. Her research focuses on inter- and transnational social work, social services as well as on care-leavers and user involvement in health and social care. Her most recent research project involves several stakeholders in the region and is occupied with occupational aspirations of care leavers and their pathways to autonomy.

Elisa Nardin is a pedagogue with a specialisation in social welfare governance. For years she has been working in the field of disability and in planning and consulting in social agriculture. Passionate about travel and research, she pays particular attention to aspects of social entrepreneurship in foreign countries, particularly Greece. Starting with volunteering in various social contexts and in Africa, she has trained herself to work as a freelancer, also within academic circles and public administrations, and to promote social innovation in favour of a civil economy.

Roberta Nicolodi is a sociologist and has worked as a long-time practitioner in the field of women's and children's migration in South Tyrol, Northern Italy. Currently, she is working as a public servant in the health care sector. She received her PhD from the Free University of Bozen-Bolzano. Her research focuses on space-based approaches in social work, inter-organizational networks and social innovation.

Urban Nothdurfter is associate professor in Social Work and Social Policy at the Free University of Bozen-Bolzano, where he is head of the BA programme in Social Work. His research interests focus on the connections between social policy development and social work practice, the street-level delivery of social policies, and on issues of gender and sexuality in social work. Recent projects deal with LGBT+ parenting and the political role of social work. He was visiting researcher at the UC Berkeley School of Social Welfare and was awarded the Jos Berghman Welfare Studies Stipend from KU Leuven.

Alessandra Piccoli is a post-doc researcher at the Free University of Bozen-Bolzano. She holds a Master in Social Economy Management and a PhD in Social Pedagogy with a dissertation about community supported agriculture. Her research interests are: local food networks, food sovereignty, participatory action research, and social and solidarity economy. She has 15 years of experience in European project writing and management in the field of community building and social activities.

Mara Plotegher is a specialist social worker and has been working for twenty years with the University of Trento as a tutor for internships in the degree programme in Social Work.

Cristiana Ranieri has a background in clinical and community psychology and professional experiences in university cooperation research projects. Since 2001 she has been a researcher at INAPP (National Institute for Public Policy Analysis) in the field of social inclusion and welfare policies. Her publications and research activity, both quantitative and qualitative, focus on: interventions in favour of disadvantaged groups, integrated territorial systems and the functions of social work, networks with social economy organizations as well as on accountability and sustainability issues.

Angela Rosignoli is a specialist social worker and works as tutor's coordinator in the degree programme in Social Work at the University of Trento. She is co-author of several books and articles on social work education in both national (La Rivista di Servizio Sociale, Prospettive Sociali e Sanitarie, Autonomie Locali e Servizi Sociali) and international (The British Journal of Social Work) journals. Currently, she also serves as president of the professional association of social workers of the Region Trentino–South Tyrol.

Antonio Samà is a researcher at the Department of Political and Social Sciences of the University of Calabria where he teaches organisation of social services. He is Head of LARCO (Laboratorio per l'Action Research e la Consapevolezza Organizzativa) and Professional Partner of the Tavistock Institute of Human Relations. His research, teaching and organisational consultancy activities (mainly in the UK and Italy) include inter-organisational and inter-professional collaboration, whole system change in complex social service delivery systems, action research and complexity theory applied to organisational and community systems.

Susanne Schumacher is a researcher at the Faculty of Education at the Free University of Bozen-Bolzano. Her research focuses on the conception, implementation and refinement of complex multimedia teaching and learning environments, as well as on school development in general. Moreover, she is interested in the topic of transitions within the educational system and into the professional world.

Ulrike Stadler-Altmann is full professor for General Didactics/School Pedagogy at the Free University of Bozen-Bolzano and scientific director of the EduSpace Lernwerkstatt (learning workshop). Her main areas of work and research focus on empirical school and classroom research, innovative learning environments, teacher professionalism, cooperative theory-practice transfer, women's and gender studies in educational science.

Laura Trott is a researcher in the field of pedagogy and didactics with a focus on inclusion at the Faculty of Education of the Free University of Bozen-Bolzano. Her research focuses on early childhood education and care, inclusive pedagogy, migration and qualitative social and educational research. She graduated in social work and social pedagogy and completed her PhD in general pedagogy, social pedagogy and general didactics with a thesis on agency of unaccompanied refugee minors in an institutional context.

Cinzia Zadra works as a researcher at the Faculty of Education of the Free University of Bolzano-Bozen. Her research interests examine learning and citizenship in the light of place- and community-based education. In particular, she is interested in the development of social and inter- and transcultural competences through reflective and narrative practices. Her scientific work focuses on participatory and qualitative research approaches.

Franca Zadra is a post-doc researcher at the Free University of Bozen-Bolzano where she works on the creation of collaborative networks to prevent the exploitation of agricultural labor in Northern Italy. She has research and teaching experiences in the areas of migration policy, sociology of communication, and the social innovation of public services for a better inclusion of disadvantaged groups, especially in the areas of education and healthcare. After years of experience in South American countries, she has contributed to research projects for Museo Storico in Trento and EURAC Research, and has recently spent research periods at Gent and Bielefeld University, and at the Max Planck Institute for Social Law and Social Policy in Munich.

Chiara Zanetti holds a PhD in Transborder Policies for Daily Life from the University of Trieste-IUIES. Former research fellow in Environmental and Territorial Sociology at the University of Trieste, she currently deals with social policies in public institutions.